

Indeed, these two sisters, one of whom is Atlantan Shelley Yankus, use their imaginations. Growing up, their mom's favorite saying was "waste not, want not," which Shelley says is probably the reason the pair is so into reusing and recycling. Each original piece of recycled jewelry they create is made from or adorned with vintage buttons. Delicate and understated, the pieces come in a variety of shapes, styles and colors. In addition to the Web site, you can find the jewelry at Beehive Co-op in Atlanta, Cherry Pie in Vinings, Cranberry Corners in Dahlonega and the Madison-Morgan Cultural Center in Madison. Spread the Bread

Sweet bread goes with the holidays like tinsel on a Christmas tree. If you're too swamped, stressed or kitchen-phobic to make your own, try any of the delicious flavors from Breadwinner, created by a husband-wife-sister team. About a year ago, they sold their first batch of loaves at Buckhead's Souper Jenny in an hour, and knew they were onto something. Although you can still find the baked-fresh-daily seasonal breads at Souper Jenny and Metro Fresh in the city, they can also be delivered straight to your home. Even with flavors like Frankly, My Dear, I Don't Give a Cran, Party at my Place Pumpkin Bread and Better than a Bubble Bath Mocha Chocolate Chip, the taste is better than the clever names. Show up to a party with one of these amazingly moist breads and you just might hear your host say "Be Still My Beating Tart Lemon Blueberry Bread." To order, visit getloafed.com or call 404.822.9889.

What you Talkin' 'Bout, Mama?

Love Your Mama, a line of homemade body products like salt scrubs, lotions and butters, was developed by self-described "part wannabe hippie, part aspiring entrepreneur" Emilie Sennebogen. As a former film industry freelancer in L.A., she often had down time between jobs and had a hard time sitting still. "I ordered a bunch of natural raw ingredients, turned my kitchen into a workshop and started experimenting," she says. "The minute I made oil and water combine, I was hooked." Now living in Atlanta, Sennebogen works on every last detail of her business, from mixing essential oils, shea butter and herbs to producing her own funky labels and handling the bookkeeping. "And I love every minute of it," she says. You'll appreciate her hard work when you rub some of her lotions or butters into your skin. Ingredients like devotion and passion help make her products different than most of the commercial ones on the market. Try one of her three limited edition holiday scents: pumpkin, cranberry and balsam, available in soy candles, body scrubs and gift basket combos. Mama's products also can be found at Cherry Pie in Vinings and Atlanta's Beehive Co-op. To order, visit loveyourmama.com or call 404.288.8447.
